Ross Chinese garden close

by Janna Sherman

A memorial garden to the pioneer Chinese gold diggers at Ross is nearing completion.

The $180,000 project began as a seed four years ago and then flourished with the support of the Christchurch Chinese community.

Construction is only six weeks away, with a range of donated features including a pagoda, two stone lions, a stone bridge and seating to be placed after work to level the pathway has been completed.

Project leader Biddy Manera, from the Westland Region Environment Network (WREN), said the garden landscaping, led by Warren Montagu, would follow.

The gardens will feature a rockwall at the entranceway, a meandering pathway, dry water course, flowering cherry trees and native plants and trees, replicating the surroundings the Chinese diggers lived and worked among in their time in Ross in the 1870s.

"The gardens acknowledge and reflect the story of the Chinese pioneer goldminers' times as members of the Ross community from the 1870s," Ms Manera said.

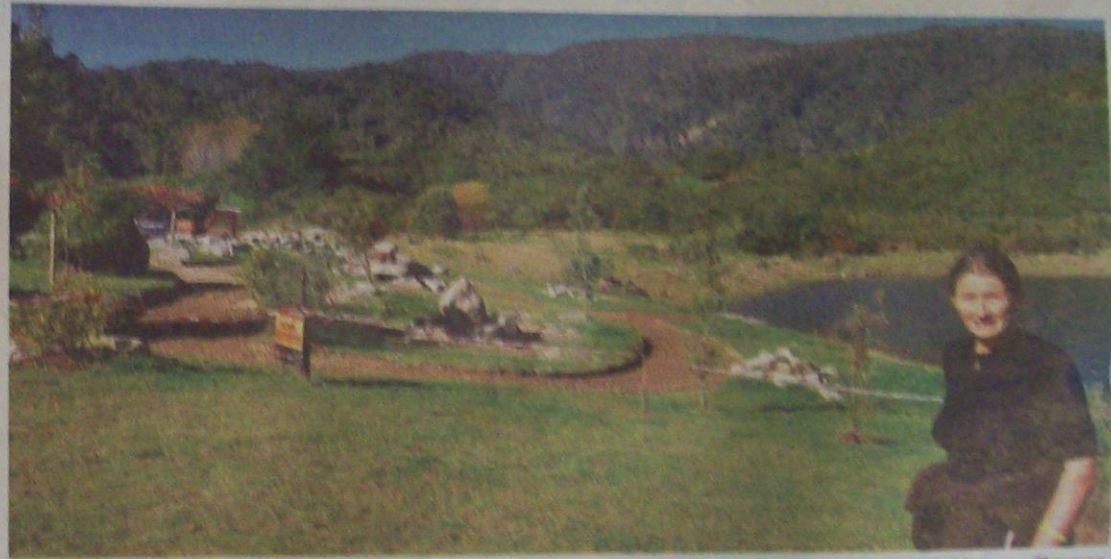

Lime chip from the nearby Ross Lime Co will be used, and a local stonemason will assemble the rockwalls.

Planning for an official opening is also under way and will involve everyone who has contributed, from the Chinese Consulate-General and stakeholders from the Christchurch Guandong Association and the New Zealand Chinese History and Culture Association, to the Westland District Council and Department of Conservation, which owns the land, and the Ross community.

Meanwhile, other WREN projects around the Ross Lake area are also continuing to progress.

Ms Manera said a fun cycle area was planned adjacent to the Ross Domain on DOC reserve tagged for community green space.

Hokitika landscape artist Sue Asplin was helping to draft the overall concept, which would tie in with the pathways and plantings around the site, she said.

New memorial oak trees have also been planted, in homage to former members of the Ross Home Guard.

Ms Manera's father, Tom Manera, still living in the Totara Valley, is the last surviving member of the Ross Home Guard during World War Two.

The plantings complement others done over the years along Grimmond Avenue, which has been replanted with oak trees in memory of the fallen and returned servicemen and women from Ross.

Natural rock formations will surround the Table & Chair areas.

Planting will be the last to be done, a mixture of cherry trees, New Zealand Native trees, ferns, flora and fauna, plus Roses.
